Recur, a designer and developer of non-fungible tokens (NFTs) for sports fans, said it raised $50 million in a Series A funding round led by Digital, an investment platform backed by hedge fund billionaire and New York Mets owner Steve Cohen.

The funding round values the company at $333 million, Recur said Monday.

The company also said it's planning to bring collegiate athletics to the NFT space, starting with the Pac-12 Conference. Recur has partnered with Veritone, an artificial intelligence company, to license Pac-12 video highlights on NFTU, a new marketplace for National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) themed NFTs.

Overview

DIGITAL is an investment firm founded by Mark Daniel, Benjamin Milstein (OhhShiny), and Steven Cohen.

We focus on partnering with companies where building a world-class community can be a core competitive advantage. Projects we work with can range from the infrastructure layer (blockchain protocols, developer tools, etc) to cultural applications (NFTs, games, etc) and everything in between!

We are both stage and size agnostic, making investments from $250k-50m. Some of our most notable investments include Sky Mavis, MoonPay, Genies, Dapper Labs, RECUR, Yat, Artie, IMX, Guild of Guardians, Royal, and Yuga Labs.
