Is_self: True

You really ought to take a step back and think about what you're fighting for. Do you really stand behind this sick, twisted, abomination of a financial system? Are you really okay with the depth and breadth of human suffering it has caused? Come on. I can imagine what you've told yourself—this is just the way it is, money isn't everything, other people can work hard to get where I am, and my personal favorite, you can't save everyone. Blah fucking blah. I call bullshit. On you. On your friends. On your families. On the whole fucking thing. All the misery in the world—guess what? You are the cause. Your complicity. Your ability to ignore the long term ethical implications of your choices. Your smug declarations that retail investors are a bunch of millennial morons who don't want to get a job.

Silly “meme stock” traders just following the herd. Well, I've got a little secret for you—many of us are older, wiser, far more educated, and/or vastly more experienced in life than you are. Many of us have seen the worst this miserable shithole of a world has to offer and still found the strength to come away from it with our integrity intact. Many of us have suffered some irrevocable loss because of a lack of access to decent healthcare, reliable housing or a good education, and we've still found a way to do the right thing. To learn. To help others. Even when it hurts. Even when it's hard. Even when we don't have enough for ourselves. Can you say the same? I'd wager not.

So you see, deep down, everything you believe about yourself being a good person is a lie. You're not. Not anymore. Perhaps you never were. You are the ultimate supervillains— a network of power hungry money machines that hoard their wealth, manipulate the media, and who justify it all with a bunch of poorly constructed logical fallacies. You shrug off the horrors of the world muttering things like, not my country/state/family/life, not my problem. You are the bad guys, here. Not us. I am sorry you can't see that, yet. I am sorry you're about to lose your jobs, your sense of security, maybe even your freedom.

You are playing a game of financial chicken with the entire free world. I hope you understand what that means. Pandora's box isn't just open, it's been blown the fuck apart. The ending has already been written. It is a fait accompli. But you want to keep up the charade. Keep playing the game. That's fine. We like games, or haven't you heard? So, you hang onto those lies you tell yourself about all that money you don't really deserve. Apes will be here watching oh so carefully. And we see everything you do. Let's see who blinks first. ■
