They reason, if SHFs were shorting GME at 150 all year and now the price is 100, they can buy back and cover (take the difference as profit).

But wait. The only reason the price is 100 is because they keep selling at 100. There are no shares available to sell at 100 so what do they do? They short sell shares at 100. You get me? They are not buying at 100. They are selling at 100. If they were buying, they'd be paying what the real share owners were asking, if the real share owners were selling. Which they are not.

So, no. No one is covering at 100. They're just digging that hole deeper.
