

Title: Where will sudden inflow of tendies be safest in the interim?

Author: BPP703

Created 2021-05-16 00:59:15 UTC

Permalink: /r/ratioatblessons/comments/ndcyk6/where_will_sudden_inflow_of_tendies_be_safest_in/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/ratioatblessons/comments/ndcyk6/where_will_sudden_inflow_of_tendies_be_safest_in/

I've seen discussions / posts on other forums but I think one here could be good. I'm not asking about places outside of the market (real estate, crypto, precious metals etc) but thoughts on risk management of those tendies in the immediate aftermath? Because when the "powers that be" holding this thing back finally let it go, there are going to be some green balances with multiple commas sitting in some Ape and Apettes brokerage accounts.

Don't have the resources for attorneys, FIDUCIARY financial advisors, accountants etc at the moment. I personally plan on utilizing all of the above and more to protect the fruits of "holding". But can anyone speak to concerns / thoughts about having potentially large cash balances just sitting in multiple bank accounts (i.e FDIC limits) until the appropriate estate planning measures can be put in place? Thoughts on a brokerage and bank combo? Credit Union vs Banks? Thanks all.