

Title: Why no posts about LIBOR/SOFR?

Author: enm260

Created 2021-12-16 21:55:44 UTC

Permalink: /r/DDintoGME/comments/ri1a1z/why_no_posts_about_liborsofr/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/DDintoGME/comments/ri1a1z/why_no_posts_about_liborsofr/

I remember reading quite a bit about the switch from LIBOR to SOFR over the summer before the date was pushed back, but since then I don't think I've seen a single post about this on any of the stock subs I'm subscribed to. This seems strange since from the little bit I do understand (I am a dumb ape after all) it seems like the switch to SOFR will have enormous consequences for any stock with a large number of open derivatives (like GME). And the new switchover date is coming up fast (December 31st). It's there a reason no one is really talking about this lately? Do people feel like it's unlikely to affect GME much or is it just impossible to predict how it will be affected? I wish I could answer these questions myself but starting a conversation is better than nothing IMO