The drop yesterday after 1:00 somewhat reminded me of "the drop" from March of last year. Funds hunt stop losses as they drop the $GME share price and trigger the stop losses, adding to the downward pressure. Not using stop losses makes funds expend more capital to achieve their ends.

With the dividend split upcoming drops like yesterday might occur again. No need to make the funds' jobs easier by using stop losses.

Buy if you can, register if you haven't, hodl regardless, and shop GameStop.
