As a long-time eToro plebian I've finally made the moves to get a Commsec account happening, and ultimately transfer a bunch of my shares over to Computershare via DRS.

Funny thing, I rang to confirm that my forms were in order, since there's currently a bug within the Commsec system that doesn't properly articulate the status of submitted forms in some instances. As an aside, I asked if the zero-fee transfer for shares was still in place.

"When it comes to GME, no -- a lot of shares have a fee of around $50-80 American, but with GME it's free."

I had to laugh, because despite his answer, **I never previously mentioned GME**. So I had to ask: how'd he know what I was asking about?

"I've never taken a call about DRS that wasn't about Gamestop, and we get a lot of them. So I was pretty confident. What do you call yourself? An ape, right?"

"Smoothbrained as they come, dude. But I'm actually going to DRS Robinhood."

He laughed and wished me luck with GME. So hey, shoutout to the Commsec guy for being a good sport. No idea why he didn't believe me when I said I was going to register some Robinhood.

It's been higher than this previously, but GME's still sitting happily in the top 10 traded international stocks with an 80-20 buy-sell ratio. So please rest assured that everyone down here is doing their best, but just as a PSA to any other Commsec users: whether you believe in DRS or not, if you're on Commsec, there's **literally no reason not to do it**. It's free, for fuck's sake.
