Iv noted that during the split, and some other events that caused some heightened popularity with GME, Computershare's website doesn't seem equipped to handle that volume of traffic, which is understandable. When the inevitable unprecedented financial event hits, I'm sure CS is going to be flooded with people trying to access the site. Has anyone considered how that could effect things?

Of course this wont effect the people who don't plan on selling at all, but for those who will, what's your thoughts?
