I called the NYSE at 12:15 ET approx, was transferred over to the trading (floor) help center. I asked - Why was GME halted today on the NYSE?

\- LULD , Single stock circuit breaker <https://www.nyse.com/products/etp-limit-up-limit-down>

Keyword here is " Extraordinary Market Volatility" in the description "On May 31, 2012, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) approved, on a pilot basis, a National Market System Plan to Address Extraordinary Market Volatility, known as the Limit Up - Limit Down ("LULD") Plan."

\- apparently this is common, somehow I don't quite buy that

How can the stock (at least based on official graphs) change by (max) approx. 8% and be considered "extraordinary volatility"? (Hit almost 199, and then 163) - something does not make sense.

It would be nice if NYSE could help us understand how 163 -> 200 is considered extraordinary! Or is it that the stock did hit $500ish and this caused LULD to kick on. Apologies did not have the time for a longer conversation with the folks. They seemed nice though - please do not be disrespectful if you do call the NYSE, the folks on the phone are just doing their job - maybe some of them are even apes ;-)
