When GME first squeezed in early

2021, it went big. Most people and institutions weren't expecting it. Then, the institutions got wise and drove the price down to the $40s in just a couple of weeks. IIRC it stayed there for a few weeks in high $40s low $50s. It spiked a few times and then one day, out of the blue, it went back in the $200s I think.

Now that each side is aware of the tactics of the other, how does tomorrow play out. Will they drive the price down to cover (in some illegal fashion that no one but the investors seem to care about) or will they buy the calls/shares and then cover, knowing the price will rise rapidly? And then buy puts and short on the way back down?
