The Patent Troll Industry has a near 100% win-rate, when it comes to extracting money from businesses. Trolls have exceedingly deep pockets (lawyers with a business model) that will bleed any company dry by overwhelming them with legal costs disproportionate to a settlement, pre-trial.

The patent stems from the early intellectual property belonging to Yahoo at the height of the DotCom bubble. Digi Portal is a pseudo-holding company that buys primarily web/tech-based patents from failed companies at firesale prices, and then proceeds to go on campaigns suing as many companies as possible, in friendly jurisdictions (read that as bought) that have favourable case-law records to back up their legal claims; despite how retarded they may be. There are several of these companies that exist and their only purpose is to shakedown companies for millions of dollars because the cost of litigation is more than settling.

This kind of business practice is, not only predatory but also, extremely toxic to the judicial system because of the perverse incentives created by a cottage industry fabricated entirely by the legal profession. Many people have attempted to take out the trolls but, much like trying to sue the SEC or financial services companies, results are never achieved by way of a dismissal or non-guilty verdict.

Oh look, there's harmless words that you can't say here.
