My childhood friend works in the financial market and manages thousands of retirement/pension accounts. He's adamant that all companies learned from GameStop last January and implemented significant risk protocols to protect themselves from short squeezes. He said Bloomberg only shows short interest at 21% for GameStop so the level of we are expecting is likely to not happen that it could cause a market collapse. I told him they are hiding it so the short interest isn't correct on any platform.

PLEASE send the specific due diligence that proves they haven't covered to help him understand the risk these retirement accounts are at.
