

Title: FUD reposts are dangerous! Ignore and move on...

Author: disoriented_llama

Created 2021-07-23 21:27:00 UTC

Permalink: /r/TheGloryHodl/comments/oqbxpi/fud_reposts_are_dangerous_ignore_and_move_on/

Url: /r/Superstonk/comments/nxis4e/studies_show_that_consuming_just_five_minutes_of/

Is_self: False

Linked Post:

Body:

Hello lovely apes! I feel like this needs to be addressed.

Look, I get it. You're browsing Robinhood constantly. Maybe you even have a GME Google alert on your phone. And every time it dings with a new FUD hit piece about GME, your ape brain goes "ohmergawd KARMA!!" So you hike up your britches and rush to post a screenshot of the article you saw with the title "Can't believe the hedgies are lying like this!" Maybe before everyone else does. You hope to get many green crayons. You want your little moment.

I'm going to give you all the benefit of the doubt and assume that if you post these screenshots, it either comes from a misguided sense of wanting to help the cause, or at worst it's a naked karma grab.

But I am going to SERIOUSLY RECOMMEND - no, implore - you to stop doing this.

All it takes is five minutes of propaganda to place the seeds of doubt in someone's mind. It doesn't matter, at all, if the propaganda is wrapped in "motivation." Or if you're "hate-reading it." Once you see it, once you scroll past it, it starts worming its way into your subconscious. If you glance over 50 FUD article screenshots over a day of browsing Reddit, that's well beyond the five minute threshold.

I genuinely don't get it. The hedgies are spending a lot of money to pay people to write these articles, in order to cast doubt in the minds of retail. Why on earth would you help them in any way? There is no such thing as bad publicity, and you're helping them spread their message farther and wider than they could ever have hoped for.

I promise you, the Superstonk community does not need you to post a screenshot of every FUD article you come across. It's detrimental to the cause. I mean, sure, maybe you won't sell after seeing it, but brand new apes? Your grandma who's just made her first Reddit account to "catch up on the young'uns?"

Besides, we get it by now. The media is complicit and lying through their teeth. That hasn't changed, and it won't, and as the MOASS approaches it's only going to get worse and worse and make you more and more pissed off. We do not need to constantly re-establish that narrative on here, and these karma grab posts are something we desperately need to fix, ASAP.

So take a deep breath, turn off your GME Google notifications, put down the RH app, stop reading Bazinga, and for the love of God, please help to keep these articles where they should be: on their own bullshit sites to be ignored and unread.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■