Hello everyone,

With the recent history of connections between BCG and the biggest scandals in corporate history, I wanted to contribute my grain of sand in the field where I work as an employee.

I have to start by saying that I have been in the company for more than 3 and a half years, I can provide the mods with proof of this and that I am still in the company.

Recently I decided to investigate in my country (Spain) about BCG and how it has impacted our society, but using Ockham's razor theory, I decided to take it to the easiest part, my company. Telefonica is one of the largest telecommunications companies in history, not only in Spain and Latin America, but also in the world, it has more than 200,000 workers and for many years it has constantly fallen on the stock market.

Boom! Mckinsey and BCG together to advise Telefonica on Movistar+, which is a company within the group that broadcasts movies, series, football matches, etc... Movistar launches new things every year, has its own production company, and even wins every year the competition to broadcast the champions league and many other sporting events, Movistar is one of the company's flagships.

EDIT: In like 5 minutes I could reach some of the news below from Movistar+ and the conection between McKinsey and BCG with Telefónica:

They explain that we are actually under control of Mckinsey since 2016, we are really into the radar of something bigger. The new CEO of Movistar, Sergio Oslé was ex BCG, and one of the biggest advisors is Ángel Vilá ex Mckinsey. Both were the ones who made the decision that Mckinsey and BCG analyze the decision-making on Movistar +

Along with this announcement, Telefonica has created T. Tech, a division of the company with more than 2000 people working in IoT, Big Data and Cybersecurity, I have many friends inside and I know what has been happening, they have invested billions in creating this company and believe me when I say this, we call them smoke sellers, they do not really have solutions to be able to sell them to other companies, but they outsource everything possible, from start to finish, marketing, implementation of solutions and many more stuff. I firmly believe that these companies are behind, and there have been rumors that after having created T. Tech there were investment firms interested in buying, do not doubt that soon we will have a director of BCG-McKinsey within the company if not, he is already advising the company in the worst way so that others take their share of the cake.

I will keep an eye on this, but i crearly believe that T. Tech and other companies inside Telefonica have been manipulated and bad advisers by this big companies like it was Gamestop in the past, I have fear that they want to control everything in the planet, and you know guys, information is the key in this world.
