if I invest through Computershare the exact price of a share, then the price rises before the share is purchased, so I invest some more to cover purchasing full share instead of fractional. My question is do both of those purchases go through as fractional and I have two fractional sums, or are they combined into one share? Since it's two transactions I just don't know if I'm going to need to jump through extra hoops

In other words, are fractional shares, when totaling the price of a single share at current price in Computershare, are they automatically combined into one share or held separately as fractional sums?
