Some quick fundamentals for the new apes among us who may be nervous their recent investment has gone down.

OpenSea is an online NFT Marketplace and has 1 million+ users who sell NFT Jpegs to one another. Crypto Punks, Bored Apes & all that jazz. Their marketplace / company is now valued at $13 billion market cap.

GameStop market cap is currently $7.9 Billion (and climbing). They have 55 million (and climbing) power up rewards members.

Let's dumb this all down and pretend GameStop only uses their upcoming NFT marketplace for their users to sell jpegs (lol). Even if only 10% of all rewards members participate that's still 5x the users of OpenSea.

When the GameStop marketplace launches their share price and market cap will certainly go up. No price prediction, just up.

I believe this is an apt comparison to show where things could be headed. In addition None of this includes building on Loopring Tech, what their partnerships (IMX, MSFT & whomever else) bring to the table, the upcoming marketplace being used beyond jpegs, the incredible new team running the company, 0 debt and the fact that Ryan Cohen has been successful before.

All this is to say there's no need to stress about the share price when it "falls" cause one day you'll wish you bought in at these discounts.

Not financial advice of coarse just my opinion but If there's no big announcement after earnings and the share price "tanks" who really cares? If the fundamentals don't change then Stay Zen, Buy, Hodl & DRS
