I need help voting.

I'm a german ape and want to exercise my right to vote. In theory it shouldn't even be that difficult, but at the very least it should be possible. I just got off the phone with my broker (consors /bnp paribas) and I'm pretty frustrated. They told me that I can't vote via the broker itself because they don't hold the stocks or the even invitations to the shareholder meeting themselves. They say I'm basically credited to my gme shares via an anonymous pool in germany which itself is credited to the actual shares that are held somewhere in the states. They can't tell me which share depot actually holds the real shares and who to contact to demand access to my voting rights. I'm definitely DRSing my shares (no matter how complicated) as I've basically just been told I don't own jack shit and can't even vote. They say the best they can do is give me a formal declaration of ownership, validating my general depot and that I „own“ gme shares. No control number, no legal proxy, nada. They say to contact gme investor relations and see if they'll take said depot validation as enough proof to vote. I doubt this will work. I'm so pissed. Obviously I need to DRS my shares but the transfer will hardly go through before the ASM. Does anybody have any idea what I should do ?

Have any other euro apes run into similar difficulties and know what I can do ? From what I understand this should be a problem for any euro apes trying to vote their shares.

Thanks in advance.
