The stock split still has to be voted on by shareholders which means all of us. My understanding is that the broker that holds your shares DOES NOT have to submit your vote if they feel like it's not in their interest to do so since the shares are technically in their name. Please disprove this if I'm way off base.

Having the shares in YOUR name GUARANTEES that your vote counts towards any proposals GameStop puts forth. The stock split in the form of a dividend sounds suspiciously like the NFT dividend many of us were asking Ryan Cohen to issue when the saga started.
