Talking about GME was easy with the DD and free availability of information to willing ears. It took a while but the fearlessness/confidence was legit. I gave caveats, encouraged individual research, and mentioned repeatedly I have only invested what I can afford.

I have two tracks on this: the company proper and it's future alongside the oversold shorts theory. I agree with both but the first is the real basis for buying in. That and Ken Griffin looking like he just got buggered by his own ghost in front of Congress.

I tempered all hype with facts and had good explanations as to why the price is wrong.

What was your path through that?
