If there are roughly 76-million GME shares and they split 4 to 1, that's approximately 304-million. They are authorized for 1-billion. What happens with the remaining 696-million shares? Do they just have them on reserve in case they need to put them on the market to generate capital? Does this give any advantage to naked shorters if there are hundreds of millions more shares available to for them to purchase and close their positions?

I guess the real question is, with so many more shares available, does that impact MO-ASS or impact us, as retail hodlers and the price we can get per share during MO-ASS?
