I'm not sure how many of you here use Opensea but if you do you must have noticed it have been down and crashed a lot this past few weeks when volume has been high.

Many in the NFT community has been complaning and called for an alternative and something more stable and many are frustrated with Opensea since they feel they are not using the money they have received this past year to further advance their platform.

The tweets in this post are made by a big personality in the NFT space and a founder of one of the biggest new projects released last month. "LooksRare" is another marketplace thats been newly released and is now getting new users because of the frustration with OpenSea.

That's why I feel like if a big brand like GameStop would release a new NFT marketplace at this moment of time they would truly disrupt the market and take big shares of existing actors.

edit: can't post on the other subs, so if people feels it's a good post feel free to share it.
