

Title: Condensed my DD into an image to make it more easily sharable (full DD is linked). I think this is one of the aspects of ComputerShare vs. Brokers that people really need to be made aware of, because it's something more tangible and more personal. DRS is the way, because broker shares AREN'T REAL!

is the ONLY place you have shareholder voting rights!

Whenever a SHF fails to deliver a real share on a trade, a corresponding FTR (failure to receive) is produced and randomly given to a buying broker as an IOU from the DTCC.

FTRs ARE NOT GRANTED COMPANY VOTING RIGHTS!

And because GameStop had a 100% voter turnout at last year's meeting, it is mathematically impossible for any broker to have zero FTRs. If any broker had had only real shares, a single non-voting shareholder there would have dropped the total turnout below 100%, because votes cannot be shifted between brokers.

No real shares = NO VOTES

With hundreds of millions of FTRs being held by brokers, it is safe to assume that any vote you cast through them will be heavily diluted, if they even have any votes to cast in the first place (they weren't delaying DRS requests just for fun).

DRS YOUR SHARES BEFORE THE ANNUAL MEETING!
