So, everything happening in the market is connected. The question is always "how"?

So, let's talk about how this bullshit Chinese company (AMTD/HKD) with $10M in revenues "pumps" to $2000/share (and nobody stops it). What are the possible dots that can be connected?

1.) They could be trying to sucker in retail to invest to steal money they desperately need to buy another day...but, I do not believe it's that. Volume for today was 54K, but even then, you are only in the "millions of dollars" range, which is nothing in the scale of the problem?

2.) It's obviously a pump and dump, but the MSM is already positioning it as the next meme stock craze. Is it possible that they are going to highlight the fall as well and show people buying pump and dumps is a dangerous thing...so they avoid jumping into GameStop when it finally explodes? Is this an attempt to control the narrative about how all of these pump and dumps are retail stealing other retail money? I have this as plausible...pending the near term future.

3.) If you are following the Evergrande thing, you know they were ordered to pay $1B a few days ago. I suspect they don't have $1B, but a shady Chinese company and some random ticker running up might be a way to launder some money over to them to prevent an official default from hitting the books? It might not be Evergrande exactly, but I'm pretty confident that if we looked at who owned AMTD/HKD...and who underwrote the IPO (Loop Capital... Q post #464)... that this is the real reason.

Always look at WHY not WHAT...

We're closer than we've ever been before. There's nowhere to hide anymore.

Get ready for some wild shit.
