Congrats on holding all the way to the split! This day has been foretold for sometime and I know it's one we will all remember fondly. I'm so proud of everyone who put their money where their mouth is. I think we all expect an increase in FUD tomorrow and through next week.

Whenever I see some new FUD I think back to the first congressional hearing when Congressman Bill Huizenga pressured DFV to answer if he would recommend people buy GameStop at $40. I was watching the hearing live, still unsure and curious about GameStop, the volatility in its price, and the buy button being shut off. I held two shares at the time. Most people remember this moment for DFV saying "As for me, I like the stock". What I remember is the immense pressure Rep Huizenga put on DFV to answer, asking him three times to offer investment advice at a congressional hearing, thinking he would denounce the stock. After the third attempt is when DFV said he liked the stock instead of discrediting the company or the investment, Rep Huizenga showed visible frustration and announced "I yield my time!"

I reasoned rather quickly that Rep Huizenga was trying to discredit a threat to Wall Street and took note of the extremes and desperation he used in trying to do so.

I knew beyond any doubt in that moment that GME was the real deal. When would it ever be acceptable for an elected official to use the platform of a public congressional hearing to solicit investment advice? And especially in the context of offering it to and advising the general public? Never. It blew my mind that he did that and DFV handled it brilliantly.

That's when I knew. I went and bought more shares that same day. At this time, DFV (who is now someone I deeply admire after learning more from his tweets and YouTube) was a dude on the Internet, so I credit Rep Huizenga and his crazy behavior for opening my eyes to the potential of an investment in GME. Bill if you ever read this, even though I know you never wanted it to turn out this way, I should thank you. I'm now an xx holder and will be an xxx holder by next week. Thanks Bill!

I hope my story of "when I knew" can be an ultimate FUD-buster for you. If you can remember "when you knew" I'm sure some other apes would love to hear it and be encouraged by it. Plus it's a great way to celebrate the split.
