Here's a list of data on the BCG. Sources are all available through search engine of choice. Many of the BCG worked in multiple places before they ended up where they are now. It's not an exhaustive list by any means.

There are a few heavy hitters on the list, including, I shit you not, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

There's a bunch more down below the images.

Pretty sure Boston Beer is a nothingburger here, but it's cool they founded it and did other stuff. I guess. I don't drink beer.

There's also this list here: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Category:Boston_Consulting_Group_people

Acquisitions

A fuckton of the companies these people worked over time for were acquired. Each of those companies is a potential thread to unravel.

- * Some of the acquisitions are normal, because lots of people found businesses for the purposes of selling them.
- * Some of the acquisitions are normal, because lots of troubled companies are purchased in \[leveraged\] buyouts.
- * Some of the acquisitions are normal, because Consultants would be brought in to help troubled companies.
- * Sometimes you can use past acquisitions as a selling point for your services. ("We got them bought instead of bankrupt.") Sometimes you can't. ("I want to fix this, not sell this.")

BCG intersects every list of the four lists above.

David Size (Pandora) has worked for ~5 companies that were later acquired?

I'm not implying anything nefarious.

I am implying it is opportunity, and, in some cases, it is also intent.

Opportunity & Intent are two of the three points you need in the fraud triangle. This wouldn't necessarily be fraud. I'm not saying it's crime.

But if it is crime, Opportunity & Intent are two of the three points you need.

<https://at2030.org/product-narrative:-wheelchairs/>

>The document reflects a detailed analysis of the market landscape for wheelchairs and associated services and systems and proposes a potential strategic approach to increasing access to affordable and appropriate devices and services. The report builds on the wheelchair analysis completed by the Boston Consulting Group for USAID and the Global Disability Innovation Hub for UK Aid, both delivered in June 2018. The authors wish to acknowledge and thank wheelchair sector experts, many of whom were brought together through the GATE network, for their valuable time and insights that made the development of this report possible. >Xavier Mosquet, a Detroit-based managing director and senior partner at Boston Consulting Group, led a team of 20 experts that advised President Barack Obama's automotive task force in the wake of 2008 Lehman Brothers collapse. The U.S. government eventually spent more than $80 billion to bail out General Motors and Chrysler, effectively taking over both companies as they went through bankruptcy reorganizations. Mosquet spoke with Automotive News Europe News Editor Peter Sigal on what's different today...

Why?? How?? does, "in the wake of Lehman Brothers collapse," that tie in with GM and Chrysler?

The fuck???

And then they talk about COVID. It's a weird snippet in a magazine I'm unfamiliar with, and I'm American. I don't understand a lot of European perspectives.

I'm super confused.

>Patrick Rouville has joined Edenred as Executive Vice President, Marketing & Strategy. Patrick Rouville will be in charge of driving the Group's strategy, transformation and innovation in line with the roadmap set out under the Next Frontier plan for 2019-2022.

>Before joining Edenred, Patrick Rouvillois, aged 52, has been Partner & Director at Boston Consulting Group (BCG) with a strong digital dimension. A graduate of Mines ParisTech and the Sorbonne, Patrick Rouvillois started his career in San Francisco in 1991 as a scientist. In 1994, he became a BCG consultant, based in France and Oceania. In 2000 he joined Vivendi Universal to develop and later restructure digital start-ups. From 2005 to 2008 in London, he looked after group product marketing and later consumer marketing of Orange, mobile subsidiary of France Telecom. In 2008 he became Executive Director of Carrefour in charge of Marketing, eCommerce and Merchant Service. He then joined Barnes & Nobles in Luxembourg as Managing Director International in 2012 before rejoining BCG in 2015, in London then in Paris, as Managing Director and Partner of Digital Ventures and later Partner & Director.

This ties into Barnes & Nobles above.

Toys R Us

I still haven't finished going through Toys R Us, and I'm probably not going to because it smells like shit. Suing to disrupt bankruptcy process is the equivalent of queue jumping and/or saying, "MINE!" while grabbing the cookie jar.

To summarize, BCG pitched a bitch-fit because Toys R Us filed for restructure bankruptcy instead of firesale bankruptcy, and that cuts into the payouts to the creditors (BCG, others, maybe shareholders). Does that sound familiar at all? Might just be me...

Additionally, the Judge approved ~$15M in bonuses to the execs/leadership as encouragement to get their shit together and save the company, but it appears to be cash (check) which holds its value regardless of how the company does instead of stock shares that are dependent on how well the company does.

On the latter point, I give a gigantic, "Fuck you!" to the judge who made that ruling, even though the ruling is standard.
