...despite what some..fuck that..nearly everyone will say. I personally want to see GME fall below $200 and as far as possible BEFORE earnings next week. If necessary below $180 would be even better.

Not for a test of tolerance and patience.

Not to smoke out the weak.

Not to benefit the hedgies.

Not to create more bag holders.

I view a fall in price..especially a sharp decline as an indicator as to what is to come.

Monday the whispers about GME rejoining the S&P; 500 were confirmed as more than just rumors or hype. Contrary to beliefs..certain bits of reporting tends to follow motions already set.

More eyes than ever before are on GME. The lurking has increased and the interests magnified.

Territorial lines that have been drawn and defended will very soon find out if the fortifications are sound. The battle began along time ago and as we've seen there have been casualties on both sides. As we draw closer to yet another direct engagement, keep in mind that it's not always only the weak who perish. Remember that a plan is only as good as it's execution, especially when the plan goes to shit.

There are MAJOR GME announcements forthcoming..not just tweets.

It has been determined that at its current price levels GME may be outside of the affordable range for increased allied involvement and result.

Ken & Gabe know what GME below $200 before earnings next week signals, and are actively working to prevent it. What a turn of events..like when the person on your left plays a ■ knowing you're holding a D-4, just to burn the person on your right who just yelled "UNO".

Sense it to make cents mint
