*Disclaimer: This post does mention bankrupt companies. I am not telling you to invest, quite the opposite.* ***In*** ***Ape: The bananas of the companies mentioned here are poisonous, stay away.***

I was investigating what apes call "baskets", and in the process I discovered a company, Washington Prime Group (WPG). They defaulted in February, and the dates are clearly visible in their chart.

I bet you got distracted by these other movements, didn't you? Peak on the 27th of January, YTD low just before March with big volume right after. Drop after March 9th, then a spike in June with massive volume---they traded more than 5 times their shares outstanding that day---until you know which date.

Fascinating. Imagine my senses tingling when Susanne Trimbath made her Tweet, asking what rules exist as to who can trade delisted companies OTC and how. So wanting data I did a quick websearch, only to be mocked by a fool. The stock they used as an example is Sears Holdings. There is a chart in there, but it's over the span of several years. So I took the liberty of pulling a YTD chart of Sears, a company that was delisted years ago, for you. Here it is, in all its glory.

Ryan Cohen made his Tweet with a Sears building torn down on the 3rd of June, in case you were wondering.

Blockbuster:
