

Title: Saw this comment 7 months ago. "The IOU's squeeze the brokers." Thought it was well formulated and still relevant today.

listen, DRS and locking the float is indeed the #1 mission, but remember what the logic behind this whole plan is:

once the float is locked, every remaining IOU in a broker is proven an unclosed naked short, that must be bought back. there's a misconception that those phantom shares could somehow be "worthless" but the opposite is true, they become extremely valuable. because in that moment IOU holders are officially sitting on an asset that shouldn't exist, but it does, and you get to name the price the counterparty has to pay to set their books straight.

the counterparty is the brokerage who sold it to you, naked. with the Clearinghouse behind them, naked.

it's the brokers & their counterparties who peddle IOUs without ever intending to trade actual shares.

as long as the DTCC has shares, all the crooked brokers are using them as an excuse and point to the same pool of Cede shares, to pretend they were actually "locating" something.

once that excuse is gone, anyone can see who is left naked. this is what happens in the market, when you officially catch someone stealing selling nonexistent IOUs, they have to close the short and buy it back.

if you understand that logic, you can see why it's crucial to keep the float locked up and make sure ALL phantom shares are closed first, because once they get the excuse back to rehypothecate and point to the same Cede share, they'll stop covering IOUs again, until we relock the float.

without anything to "locate" from, the IOUs become NOT worthless to us, but useless to the broker, because they can not be used to fake-cover another IOU anymore. the chain is broken, and all the IOUs they must buy back, evaporate in their hands as long as the float is in apes' diamond grip.

locking the float breaks the DTCC's share printer. the IOUs squeeze the brokers.

locking the float is our Godmode cheat that makes the IOUs infinitely valuable, but only while it's locked. imagine keeping it locked for weeks and months. that's the actual squeeze, that's when they feel the pain and start to bleed. brokers will try to sit it out, but we can outlast them and keep holding, I want it to last forever
