

Title: Since the majority of brokers all have clauses in their terms of service that allows them to liquidate/force sell any stocks you hold with them, what's stopping them from force-selling all of the remaining synthetics once all real shares are registered?

I am 100% DRS'd, but this is a genuine question I've been wondering.

GME is held by millions of retail investors across the globe and for those that are unable to DRS for whatever reason, can't these retail brokers use this clause in their ToS to legally force-sell all synthetic GME?

Regardless of the answer, I am still zen about my investment knowing how successful GameStop's transformation is going and how profitable the NFT marketplace already is with just JPGs, let alone when it starts selling gaming NFTs.
