Let me start with this gem

In the same episode referenced above, there is also a photo on the wall in the background at times.

Now, this might not mean much to you if you haven't seen the show. Honestly I highly recommend you do before reading some spoilers.

Mr. Robot consists of a modern day dystopia, where corporate greed has pushed the world into a plutocracy of sorts. There are some incredibly wealthy people that have formed a kind of alliance designed to coordinate and defend their legacies.

In the final season, Elliot, the main character, designs an elaborate plan that leaves this alliance and their individual collections of wealth vulnerable. He is able to extract everything from them... all the wealth is distributed among the common people split equally.

The final episode, Elliot and his sister sit in public watching as people look at their phones to notice this new found wealth. Elliot has succeeded and it unlocks his true self, that was never seen in the show until the final moments. —

So. That damn cat poster and Easter egg, used at the climax of the series, was placed at a time of incredible confusion and uncertainty.

I find this interesting is all. Of all things DFV could have shown, it was the cat poster during actual congressional hearings. An Easter egg of sorts, perhaps. GME seems to be full of surprises.
