I've been hodling for more than a year now and still believe that gme will increase in value over time. But the pessimist in me can't stop wondering if Gamestop/Ryan actually wants moas to happen. Or just gme reaching high numbers in a short amount of time.

Say moas happens and gme's value per share reaches insane numbers, wouldn't everybody selling cause gamestop's worth to eventually drop rapidly? Shorters being forced to buy back shares at ludicrous prices will obviously make gamestop skyrocket in value, but once the shorters are out and apes have sold (most of) their shares, wouldn't that have a negative effect on the company?

Wouldn't it be more interesting for gamestop (in the long run) to keep as many apes as possible for as long as they'd like?
