I learned about GME way too late last year to join the OG January Apes but I learned enough to get in later, purchasing directly from CS, and convert to BOOK. 100% of last year's investment is safely in the pool out of DTCC and Kenny's grimy hands.

But then over the holiday week off I discovered I could split part of my FUDelity 401k into a self-directed "BrokerageLink account". Its not a Roth, seems to just be the same ole 401k...just with larger buying power than my IBKR balance. And I figured, why not use this evil power for some good?

After waiting for the longest weekend ever to end, I'm officially a January Ape 2.0 ;)

I'd really like to have the new shares safely hanging in the pool with the rest of my shares and actually lock up some more of the damn float...but no recent posts contradicting the original "no" answer, so I had to ask...Anyone tried this or thoughts on the matter?

BUY, DRS (unless I fookin cant in this acct!!), HODL, and then buy more!!!!
