Thesis:

Other highly mentioned stocks in Reddit that rose significantly in price were correlated to GME Reddit activity to attract GME long-term investors. If these notable pumped stocks were "distractions" then there must be a correlation to GME&AMC; communities' activity.

Methodology:

I scraped every post on Reddit since January 2021 and quantified posts by stock mentions. The purpose of this data analysis is to explore the argument of "distractions" within the GME & AMC communities.

Research:

The following chart examines Silver containing posts, they follow an inverse momentum to both GME & AMC:

The following chart examines SNDL containing posts, they follow a proportional momentum to GME only:

The following chart examines MVIS containing posts, they follow a proportional momentum to GME only:

The following chart examines SPRT containing posts, they follow an inverse momentum to both GME & AMC:

Conclusion: When GME Reddit activity alone increases the "distraction" is usually rising along with GME. When Both GME and AMC Reddit activity decreases the "distraction" will usually rise along.

Edit:

Working theory is that it has become easier to stimulate these pumps due to the decreased activity in both GME & AMC recently. Hence, the increased quantity of "distractions" these last couple of months:

not-so-tinfoil theory is that there is in fact service providers that facilitate these "distractions" through a mechanism that is currently being unraveled, if you remember my work on BBIG you can find suspicious behavior:

To my understanding, the following is the layout behind the Reddit mechanism of these pumps:

That's a can of worms that will be explored in following posts, stay tuned.
