This may come as a really dumb question, but curious. I am hodling GME of course, but this is what I came up with. Person A , B , and C own 2 shares each. That means 6 shares outstanding/float. Hedge fund D sells a synthetic share to person E. Person F buys the synthetic from person E. Person A decides to sell a share, which hedge fund D buys back and covers. Who's liable now for that extra share that person "E" owns? Hedgefund D already covered.
