I've talked today with my broker customer support about voting rights, then he told me this: "A corporate action may include a distribution of securities, rights or warrants granting holders of such Instrument the right to a distribution of shares or to purchase, subscribe or receive shares from the issuing company, in any case for payment (in cash or otherwise). The Third Party Broker may, in its sole discretion and without prior notice to you, sell or otherwise liquidate all or any part of the securities, rights or warrants you receive from a corporate action, which cannot be held for your Account."

He clarified that GameStop is the corporate in this example. Now, what i don't understand is this: is a stock split dividend or a nft dividend a distribution of shares or receive shares from the issuing company this kind of event?
