Don't take this as fud since it's not. I'm 95% DRS'd and have been holding since Jan 21 and will never paper hand. I'm just a sceptical person since that's how life has molded me, too many assholes and backstabbers tend to change you. I just have a question that's been bugging me.

Anyway to the question if GME now increases it's available stock close to 1bil would it be possible that if Ryan Cohen is pressured by state etc that GME would back out from the intended share dividend and instead go for a share offering of about 900mil. Now the shorts could close their positions (since it's hard to imagine retail getting that amount of money) and the economy wouldn't get wrecked more than it already is and GME would still make a load of money but we'd not get our generation changing money. Is this possible or are there some things I'm not aware of that would prevent this possibility?
