I just want to write a post about how awesome of an experience my child and I had at GameStop a few days ago.

I was going in to buy a GameStop sweatshirt with my $5 powerup rewards discount, with the discount on their merch already, it ended up only being $30. I'd say a great price for a hoodie.

Anyway, as we are in there, my kid kept grabbing the mystery egg things that he sees YouTubers open and play with. He is asking and asking to get one, but as money is tight due to all our cash being in GME, I say no. Plus, he was trying to get a mini real life product egg, instead of some kind of actual toy.

As we go to checkout, the GameStop Employee hands over a couple little Lego toys which he says are just a promotional item that they have a bunch. My kid went from disappointed to excited to be walking out of the store with something new.

Pretty small gesture, but meant a lot to me and my kid.
