The cost to borrow GME (the interest rate when borrowing shares to short) has been trailing off this last week. Since late May the cost to borrow has been reliably above 29% but in the last 7 days the cost to borrow has been dropping each day. Wednesday it dropped below 29% for the first time since May 24th, Thursday dropped further, and Friday the cost to borrow was down to 24%. In the last 7 days it dropped 8%.

Obviously there has been a big distraction this last week.

On the plus side it shows that we make a real difference when we keep buying GME!
