Just heard... The analyst was a bit shocked as he expected the number to come in around 5.7 or so. And even though we know this is a still a low-ball number in comparison to the what we are all living on a day to day, it would now seem that reality has hit home since many many people are having a hard time making ends meet.

Even if they should have posted an inflation rate of ~ 12% or higher, they now know that the inflation train has come unhinged and people are feeling it big time! IMO, major interest rate hikes coming. They simply have no choice. Market close to Boom! Boom! Govs can no longer manipulate the reality of the situation and hide its effects on Joe/Jane average. Buckle Up you GME Apes!

Edit : For comparison... highest inflation increase since Jan 1991!! There is no way Govs will be able to control a "soft" landing of the impending market crash.
