I just made another post related to this earlier. I think it would be beneficial to take the gme dd library and have every article published in a paperback book. Whoever took the responsibility to do so would have no right to take the profits and credit must be given to those who authored the posts. But these posts these people made, they're literal gold and they will be after the MOASS too. They should be published so that the world who doesn't use Reddit or isn't aware of what's happening knows what happened here. The world can never forget these lessons. They inevitably will if we don't act to prevent it. If we believe Reddit won't come under the influence of the people perpetuating these crimes were fools and have learned nothing. They can delete all history of this and make us all baby killers. We need to publish a book. Every article from the dd library with the authors user name and every word and picture posted in the article. How would we go about doing this in the fairest way possible? Not one person who publishes it should be allowed to profit from the sales of the book riding the backs of others work. So this would have to be a community effort of the authors involved.
