So I sold some stock on Fuhdelity today (not GME). I noticed that they nicked 33 cents off of what I was expecting to get on the sale. I know, nothing major, but still, I wanted to get to the bottom of it. So I contacted them via online chat. Turns out its a regulatory fee. See fellow apes, you all probably didn't know this, but there is this commission, known as the Securities and Exchange Commission. This pittance of a fee goes to the SEC so they can provide "supervision and regulation of the securities markets and securities professionals." Is that amazing! I just thought you all should know so we can now all sleep soundly at night knowing we have an entire Commission watching out for us..... right? Guys? They are watching out for us.... right?
