And at least in some cases, pirates actually had two flags, a black one and a red one. When approaching their prey, they would hoist the black flag and fire off a warning shot. If their prey then surrendered, they would "give quarter" - not harm anyone, and simply take their valuables. But if the other ship tried to flee or fight, the red flag would be raised, meaning "no quarter". The pirates would take the ship by force and show no mercy.
