Basically, the company gave dividends to all of its shareholders in the form of a stock split. As a result of which you got 3 additional shares per each share you held before.

I understand that the statement shows it like a stock split only but that's just because dividends were not deposited in the form of USD balance instead additional shares were credited directly to the portfolio and there was no separate transaction either like it happens when simple dividends are credited in USD. It is not like your existing shares were split but instead, GME gave you additional shares as dividends and treated them like stock split.
