Mods, feel free to remove this. I'm three drinks into the night.

I'm a casual investor, took a break from $SPY only to get in on the financial revolution on $GME. I'm 50 shares in at about $150 average, and at this point I feel like if a [redacted] would happen, I'd rather ride the wave with you great people and pass these shares down to my children with letting them know about the greatest thing I've ever been apart of.

But doing this alongside the possibility of knowing that if hedgies will be forced to liquidate positions and possibly lead to a market crash, is tough. Will retirement accounts just as boomers head for retirement be wiped out? Will this lead to first world countries having massive economic downturns and unemployment soar? Will third world economies disappear?

Talk to me, I'm beginning to question why we're still here.
