Here me out here and please let me know if my math is off.

If for simplicity sake, let's say there was 1 million GME shares, and the split (dividend) made it so there's 4 million. We know 50% is DRSED. That means before split it was 500,000. Post split it's 2 million.

If we all DRSED our new shares (which I have 300 on route to CS as I type), that means the outstanding shares to DRS is 500,000 on 4 million. Which is 75% DRS.

1. Does this make sense, or am I too smooth?

2. Does the math make sense? Lol
