Not sure if this has already been covered. If so, my apologies!

Got a call from my guy today about making changes to an IRA. While I had him on the phone, for some reason I thought to ask if his brokerage (not Fidelity or one of the big houses, smaller, local) would pay a cash equivalent or give me the shares for the upcoming GME splidend. He said it was up to me, but if I didn't specify a preference, it would be the cash equivalent. I of course elected to take the stock.

Next was a live chat with Fidelity, and they confirmed stock issuance and I will see them in my account morning of the 22nd at adjusted price.
