

Title: How Do We Explain This to Non-Redditors?

Author: therealbigcheez

Created 2022-03-23 02:11:44 UTC

Permalink: /r/DDintoGME/comments/tkjhdq/how_do_we_explain_this_to_nonredditors/

Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/DDintoGME/comments/tkjhdq/how\_do\_we\_explain\_this\_to\_nonredditors/

When days like this occur, we get all sorts of "rationale" from the likes of Motley Fool, Benzinga, et al about how we as a group are fanatics that somehow move markets to the tune of billions in fair value per day. I can't for the life of me understand why non-Redditors don't see anything strange about a progression of articles such as:

1. Redditors have grown bored of meme stocks
2. Redditors fuel meme stock rally
3. Redditors give up on meme stocks
4. Redditors drive meme stocks higher

Has anyone had any conversations lately with any friends or family members that are not on Reddit to discuss how asinine this is? What do they say to justify it?