Hey Apes,

**TL;DR;** Just enjoy the music while it's on and keep your dusty cd-player as a back up because potentially we won't be able to afford to afford iPhones...

I spotted several debates lately of which entity is "printing"/creating $

\- Is it the Fed with this QE (quantitative easing) which promises no upticks in the interest rates and is buying back paper from Banks in staggering amounts?

\- Is it the retail banks that benefit from Fractional Reserves and Excessive liquidity from QE?

\- Is it the Buy now Pay later firms which overestimate the ability of their customers to repay ignoring the appalling inflation that we are going through.

\- Is it the brainwashed crowd obsessed to use all possible means to improve their credit scores and targeting the 1-2% cashbacks just so they can borrow more (I guess for refinance purposes?). I cannot stress this enough but it's insane how willing are the banks to distort your buying power. They pay us to fill rich. Just like in the subprime loan madness.

OR

\- Is it the Crypto exchanges that have flooded the Advertise market and sponsor every single thing that can be sponsored? But how do they do that? Exchanges shouldn't have to do anything with the instrument that facilitates trade upon right? If they facilitate trade on a Commodity or a Cryptocurrency that shouldn't make a difference.

Oh wait a sec, back in 2008 Banks were desperate to create give loans so they have things to package in MBS and later in CDOs so they can sell them to your mum's pension fund. This search for loans degraded the lending standards resulting in the abundance of them. Once there were no people left willing to get a loan it looks like that music stopped for them but no these guys are smart. In late 2006 banks couldn't care less about lending money. They stopped putting loans in the packages and started putting Credit Default Swaps. (Thank me later for teaching you what is a synthetic CDO, took me half a decade...) Why? because they were much easier to create.

I wonder what is easy to be created in any amount and easily be sold to investors today.... Well you guessed it... shit coins & jpegs....

*But Sile* there are so many coins/jpgs out there the exchanges have nothing to do with them...
I couldn't agree more. If someone stuck in their mum's basement can create an ERC-741 or whatever token NFT etc, so what the exchange has to do with it? Nothing...

These guys are generating product for them just like mortgage lending firms did back in the day and they were selling it to the banks...

Holy molly w8 for a second... The exchanges don;t create all that, but clearly benefit as a middleman. But who says what is good enough to be traded and have a 24/7 market. You got it, the exchanges themselves.

Their equivalent role is not just the one of the banks... is Bank + Rating Agencies Combo. Just crazy, how we ended up in this mess and how does it stop? I am not an advocate of More Regulation, I really have no clue how we get out of that mess...

Anyways I like music so I will dance along. I just wonder what is the CDS equivalent and whom I can discuss about it...

We are doomed.

This is not financial Advice.

This is my opinion.
