Is_self: True

It's a fucking shillathon out there tonight, apes! Whoa! I have never seen so many of them at out once. So, be careful. They will bait you to make you feel big and important. They will try to get information out of you, and they will be really nice about it. They will tickle your pickle with a sexy honeypot named foot fancypants—ok, not sure if that was a shill or not. Maybe she will go to Sandals with me when this is all over. Anyway, back to the point. They will use and abuse your status in the ape community as someone who is respected and admired. So they can make you feel like you know what's going on, even and especially when you don't. They will shift your thinking oh so delicately, and they will seek division based on little more than ad hominem attacks and third-hand knowledge. They may even do it in groups or group chats—who knows?

Contrary to popular opinion, they ARE smart, (I have trouble with that one, too, but it's the truth. I didn't come this far to fuck around). And they are good at their jobs. This is a deeply psychological and coordinated effort and probably pushed to discourage new investors and to split apes in two. Ever see, Billions? I have. Fucking Wendy! Who knew?

This whole time I bet you thought they were your friends. Apes like you. But don't trust them. Don't trust anybody. Don't even trust this post. Nobody is what they seem unless you know them irl. All you have is the brain in your head. Stop eating crayons and use it, assholes.

Tonight of all nights, I realized the role that psychology played in all of this. To be honest, up until now, I thought markets were about numbers and charts and graphs. But they never were. Sentiment and human behavior the secret sauce. Most humans are predictable. Apes are not. Be an ape.

This has likely been a week long effort to destabilize the ape community by isolating and distracting people in the face of what I believe to be a merger (that insiders knew about) between AMC and GameStop, but I am not getting into that because that doesn't even matter. And nobody knows if that's true. Apes are my concern. So, be vigilant when strangers approach you. And pay attention to the way they interact with you. Trust your gut. Even when, and especially when we start mooning, they're gonna get worse. Not better. But all shorts must close and their fly is open and their pricks are hanging out. Their goose is cooked. Pick a metaphor.

The MOASS is closing in. Trust yourself. Read the DD. Cross check and verify everything. You made it this far. We are almost at wen moon? So, stay Zen, my friends, and shills, fuck off. ■

Cheers,
