

Title: Something wicked...

Author: disoriented_llama

Created 2021-09-03 11:40:21 UTC

Permalink: /r/TheGloryHodl/comments/ph3gv9/something_wicked/

Url: /r/Superstonk/comments/pgyqen/behind_the_curtain_delisted_stonks_collectibles/

Is_self: False

I see a lot of chatter and speculation about the stonk pops of some OTC-BB stonks around key GME dates. Some one posted they got some real nastiness when they mentioned one. I DON:T know if there is any real relation to GME. But you have stumbled onto something big that i've always heard about, that may have to do with those dirty accounts ripping people off then wheeling the money overseas and back again (eg cayman islands). Here it is, prepare to leave Kansas:

Junk Stonks, Collectibles, Rare Art is used to launder crime proceeds, evade taxes and fund bribes, kick backs and every dirty tx of money ever. Crypto ain't got shit on this, they locked that down b/c it scares them apes could move cash secretly, so its all run thru exchanges now.

But STONKS? they won't even tell you how much is short and who sold it.

Rare art, collectibles. Ever here of a 2.5 million painting made of monkey shit on a canvass selling to an anonymous buyer. Yeah, you dumb ape, i guess you just don't understand the art world if you think that's fishy.

OTC-BB stonks are almost all fake companies or the dead former listings of dead companies. Their shares hardly ever trade, but sometimes a big buyer and a big seller meet and trade a few million. Real money is not moved around in duffel bags, that's hollywood bs. You want to wheel 5 mil out of the country, big $0.03 for some broken stonk, and have your accomplice in Caymenia sell it to you.

Now plz don't downvote me for this, but its impossible to short squeeze a blockbuster or sears. Once the bk case has been decided, and the court can't find a resolution to save a company, it goes to ch 7 (liquidation). employees, landlords and lenders are paid first. almost always (not every dam time though) there is not enough money left to pay a dime to shareholders. If shareholders were due something, it would have been paid by now.

The securities stay trading, for some odd reason: whys? book a tax loss? file a motion to reevaluate the assets or distributions schedule? give an opportunity for a white knight to buy and rescue from liquidations? There are a bunch of reason legit reasons. And not legit ones too!

now why sears and bb after all these years still a stonk? Well the tiny amount of assets makes a good contract to give a law firm to charge fees checking the boxes every year to manage it.

yeah you did stumble upon something they don't want you to look at, or ever question and certainly not buy: buying blockbuster or sear is literally throwing your money away. I think the real fear is we dumb apes buy millions of dollars of these shit octc bb lose your ass, then later investigate why. When we 'occupy' types go all, ehem, ape and expect it to get cleaned up and prosecuted. So they DONT care about us losing money, just losing it like this and we might start looking for answers, and the answer are crime. These securities are maintains to facilitate the movement of dirty money, payoff and theft/tax evasion.

Tax evasion: offset a big tendie with a big loss in one of this shit turd sandwich tickers. But the other entity you traded with profited (you also control that entity in the cayman islands) get it?

Tax evasion on terminal shorts: The shorts in these NEVER have to cover. There was always rumors they 'don't have to pay taxes' on a 'terminal short.' The irs has a rule that says you do, you do have to eventually declare it worthless and pay.

But what if the hedge fund is offshore, liquidates and moves the proceeds elsewhere? our government is so in their pockets, lets say there is a quid pro quo (a winky face) and says we will never turn this stone over. so essentially, not legal, but no taxes on a short into bankruptcy (terminal short).

This exposure could overturn tax fraud. And another motivation to destroy good companies: the tendies will be unpaid in taxes. Destruction then public theft. even better say the suits!

does that mean they HAVE to cover the bb/sears. no they don't. they can always declare them worthless and tear them up. sorry. BUT why do they seem to bang around for a fraction of a penny for so many years? why does the dtc keep so many dead securities cusips on file? money laundering?

Just don't look at this, plz. Every billionaires dont' want you looking. Oh and stay away from looking at the precious collectibles and artwork markets too. Its not like paying 2.5 million for that canvass with monkey shit scrapped on it has anything to do with payoff or money laundering. That canvass is clearly worth it, i mean monkey shit on a canvas, its so brilliant. Clearly you dumb ape doesn't 'get' the art world.

TLDR; NEVER LOOK AT THIS! The SUITS are telling you never look at these dead securities and the possible tax fraud and money laundering that could be taking place. they trade 'by appointment' and could easily be bought low and sold high in another jurisdiction and used to syphen/laundry/evade taxes.

Financial Advice: I'm telling you not to buy them, no seriously, no bullshit about this is not financial advice. It is, cuz these ARE known zeros. My theory is THEY DON'T want us to lose money and get angry and demand an explanation. They know they have no credibility with us and if they say 'stay away' we will buy, and if they say buy we will point out they are trying to sell us worthless dog shit. Either way they speak they lose, so they turn off the buy button and pray you don't ever figure out their tax fraud and money laundering schemes.